To analyze the relationship between the quality of life and other influencing factors of patient satisfaction with the social life and mental illness of inpatients with schizophrenia. A total of 215 inpatients with schizophrenia from 3 hospitals in Zaozhuang and 9 cities in Ningxia province, China, were investigated with Structural Clinical Interview for DSM-IV Non-Patient version. Level of self-perceived quality of life of the patients was assessed with European Quality of Life-5D (EQ-5D) and Social Functioning Scale (SFS). Multiple linear regression was applied to analyze the relationship between level of self-perceived quality of life and other influencing factors, such as age, sex, residence, education, family history and duration of illness. About 84% of the patients felt that their quality of life had declined in recent years. The total score of EQ-5D in patients' quality of life was 3.12 ± 0.8 . Age and duration of illness were the main factors influencing quality of life. Inpatients who were older and had longer duration of illness had lower levels of self-perceived quality of life. There was no significant difference in the SFS scores among the patients with different ages and sexes. The family history of mental illness was an important factor influencing the social life of the patients. The family history of mental illness in the patient's family was related with the family functioning. Quality of life of inpatients with schizophrenia is affected by sociodemographic factors and the duration of illness. Positive correlations exist between quality of life and family function. Heating and cooling energy consumption in buildings is a significant contributor to energy consumption, which has become a focus in today's world with environmental awareness and energy saving. Indeed, the United States Department of Energy (DOE) estimated that a typical home in the U.S. uses about $1.50 per day in energy to maintain indoor temperatures, and that about $0.80 of that cost is attributable to heating and cooling (A. M. Soni, Heating and cooling systems—A review of energy consumption and estimation of energy consumption factors in buildings, (2002)). In its most recent Residential Energy Consumption Survey (RE
